INTRODUCTION

Origins and Purpose

The word 'tithe' is of Old English origin and a system of tithe-giving to support the upkeep of the parish church and its incumbent was in existence well before the Norman Conquest. Tithe (meaning a tenth part) was the levy on the produce of land and labour, the proportion no doubt deriving from Biblical injunctions such as in Genesis 28.22. In Numbers 18.21-32 the tithe is sub-divided into three as gifts for the priests, the Temple and the poor. In England in early times this was construed as referring to the clergy, the Church and the poor but, with the passage of time, the whole of the tithe in kind became payable to the incumbent who then assumed certain responsibilities for the church fabric and for the poor.

Tithes were classified into 'predial' (based on income from the produce of the land, eg corn, oats, wood), 'personal' (assessed on income derived from an individual's industry and effort, eg pay for implements made, services rendered) and 'mixed' (part predial, part personal, eg milk production). When the incumbent received the whole of the tithe of a parish and was, in turn, responsible for the upkeep of the chancel and his living quarters and for the provisions of vestments and service books he was known as the 'Rector' (from the Latin 'regere' - to rule). But when a benefice was impropriated by a religious house (which then became Rector, albeit as a body corporate) and a vicar appointed (Latin 'vicarius' - a deputy) to be in charge of the parish then the tithes were shared by the two, the Rector receiving the 'Great' (or 'Rectorial') Tithes, which included hay, corn and timber, and the vicar the 'small' (or vicarial) Tithes, which comprised the rest. Unfortunately many instances then occurred of the Small Tithe being so small a part of the total tithe that insufficient provision was made for the Vicar whilst the Great Tithe passed to a, perhaps, not very useful absentee Rector. The situation was often further complicated when monastic holdings were seized by the Crown and sold to lay individuals.

Legislation partially cured this anomaly but did nothing to quell the endless argument, claim and counter-claim between payer and recipient of tithes which took place down the centuries. Who was responsible for transporting the tithe to the incumbent's Tithe Barn? Did the use of a horse-drawn plough create a personal tithe? What about root crops fed to animals? How did a mill value for tithing? Were windfall apples a crop? And so on and so on. That amicability between parties ever existed at all or agriculture ever flourished under such rivalry is surprising and the annual assessment of the tithe must have been a wondrous thing. To simplify the issue it sometimes became the practice in certain parishes to agree on cash payments in lieu of tithe although any such agreement was unofficial and could always be upset by either party. The principle, however, of commuting tithe renderings into money terms became increasingly popular and it was the Tithe Commutation Act 1836 which gave legal backing to commutation arrangements and, where such arrangements were not already voluntarily in operation, introduced them compulsorily.

The 1836 Act

Under the Act land values were negotiated with owners and rent-charges allocated to yield the same income to the incumbent as would have been produced by tithing.

The application of the Act in a parish was the responsibility of an Assistant Tithe Commissioner appointed for this purpose, who would engage a professional surveyor to survey the parish and to draw an accurate map of it to show every parcel of land, every house, garden, orchard, field, wood, road and railway line. The purpose of the survey was to ascertain the acreage of every plot and to record its use and state of cultivation. To this end every plot was allocated a reference number which appeared not only on the Tithe Map but also in the Apportionment of Rent-charge Schedule which was a comprehensive listing of all the plots of land. The schedule identified for each plot the owner's name and the occupier's name, gave a description of the property, its use, its acreage and (when the survey was completed) specified the sum payable by commutation. The arrangement of entries in the schedule was alphabetical by owner's name, a sequence which does not facilitate the easy identification of specific parcels of land.

The Long Ditton Tithe Map

At the time of the Tithe survey the Parish of Long Ditton embraced not only the Long Ditton parish we know today but also Tolworth which, from earliest times down to 1895 when Local Government Board Order 32638 made Tolworth a separate civil parish, had always been part of Long Ditton and taken its share in appointing Parish Officers, providing funds for parish commitments, etc.

The parish was surveyed by Thomas Crawler, Surveyor, of Cobham, Surrey and Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. He drew the Tithe Map to a scale of 6 chains to the inch (equivalent to 13 1/3 inches to the mile or 1:4752); it is dated 1842. It is signed by Crawler, counter signed by another Assistant Commissioner, Joseph Townsend, and certified to be a true copy of the original by the signatures of the two Tithe Commissioners, Wm Blamire and T W Buller.

The 'Apportionment of Rent-charge' Schedule

The schedule is in four parts.

The first part is a statement by Thomas James Tatham, the Assistant Tithe Commissioner appointed to make the Award of Rent-charge on the parish of Long Ditton. In his statement he outlines his method of procedure and summarises his findings.

The second part is a statement of the Rent-charge for the parish, made by the surveyor Thomas Crawler.

The third part, comprising fifteen sheets and prepared by Thomas Crawler, lists all 455 parcels of land in the combined parish and provides information on:

- the landowner's name
- the occupier's name
- the plot reference number
- the name and description of the plot
- its state of cultivation (arable, meadow, pasture, plantation, wood)
- its area (acres, roods, perches)
- the apportioned rent-charge (pounds, shillings, pence)

At the end of this part the fifteenth sheet carries the name 'Row Bewley' at the bottom right-hand corner; he was the scribe who hand-wrote the complete document in its neat, final form on sheets 47cm by 58cm (18 ½ inches by 22 ¾ inches).

The fourth part, on three sheets, provides a summary, prepared by Thomas Crawler, of the previous fifteen by listing the total areas and total rent-charge liability for each landowner.

Finally, the reverse side of the final summary sheet carries two confirmatory certificates; one, signed by Wm Blamire and T W Buller the Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, signifies their agreement to the Apportionment Award; the other confirms, by the application of the Commissioners' Seal, that the document is a true copy of the original Instrument of Apportionment.

APPORTIONMENT SCHEDULE

Field Names

Open Fields

The parish landscape in medieval times would have been quite unlike that depicted on the Tithe Map. The lowest land, nearest to the Thames, would have been marshy (Rushett - from O.E "rysc", a plant growing in marsh land) with little purposeful cultivation apart, perhaps, from osiers. The higher land would have been, at least in part, wooded (Woodstock - from O.E "wudu", "stoc", wooded place) with a more open heathland aspect further south (Waffron - from O.E "wafian", to wave in the air by wind action).

The bulk of the accessible land would have been arable, providing wheat for bread and barley for beer, using either a two or three-field system for crop rotation. Meadow land adjacent to streams (of which there were then several) running down off the upper land into the Rythe or the Thames would have provided only a limited supply of hay for animal winter feed and most stock would have been butchered by late autumn. The summer pasture would have been restricted in the main to grazing on fallow arable and other uncultivated land although certain areas would have been specially set aside for stock-rearing.

Open Field Farming

The arable land in the two or three field system would have been shared between the families in the parish, each family having a strip of land (perhaps up to an acre in size) in each of the open-fields; the strips would have been farmed in accord with the general plan of management devised by the parish community; thus the strip-owners in a given open-field would all have sown their seed at the same time (all the seed being for the same one crop), reaped their harvest at the same time, ploughed their land at the same time etc. etc. Whilst this uniformity of approach provided for a stable pattern of agriculture it inhibited the introduction of new types of crop and gave no real incentive to the improvement of land quality. The situation worsened with increase in population and farmers could find themselves with a multiplicity of small holdings in each of the open-fields.

Enclosure

The logical solution to the husbandry problems resulting from such restriction was for a farmer to group his separate holdings into one contiguous whole which he could then farm as an entity without too much reference to others; even so he was still limited by the "open-field" arrangement, although the benefits from the introduction of root crops and from better soil drainage gave the process of voluntary "enclosure" an added impetus.

Although Lords of the Manor had held certain rights of enclosure from the time of Edward I ordinary citizens needed to obtain a private Act of Parliament to "enclose" their holdings and disengage from their parish open-field system. Although this was a costly and time-consuming activity many hundreds of such private Acts were passed in the 18th century, leading to more general legislation in 1801, 1836 and 1854. Long Ditton proper was enclosed fairly early whereas Tolworth's enclosure award did not materialise until the 19th century.

Fields in Long Ditton

Shortly after he had purchased the lordship of the manor of Long Ditton from the Alston family (descendants of the Evelyns) Sir Peter King commissioned a surveyor, Richard Crabtree, to prepare an estate plan of his newly - acquired property. Crabtree's map, dated 1725, shows that enclosure had already taken place, a continuous patchwork of small, hedged fields covering the whole of the parish. The Tithe Map, drawn just over 100 years after Crabtree's, reveals almost exactly the same field pattern.

Fields in Tolworth

Sir Edward Evelyn bequeathed the manors of Tolworth Court and North Tolworth to his daughter Mary Glynn in 1692 and, after passing through several hands, were purchased by the Earl of Egmont in 1835 - shortly after the Enclosure Act for Tolworth was passed (the Enclosure Award was dated 2 February 1820). Thus the field pattern shown on the Tithe Map was of comparatively recent origin and many of the new "closes" (or fields) created from the erst while open-fields had not yet acquired a unique name and were merely recorded as "allotment" (46 instances of this occur in the Schedule) or by their size or use (69 instances).

Field Names

The field names appearing in the Tithe Schedule may be classified in many ways but inspection of the range of names listed in the Long Ditton documents suggests that a useful system of grouping might be as follows:

- (i) Quoted size (eg. Four Acres, Upper Seven Acres).
- (ii) Use (eg. Meadow, Orchard).
- (iii) Proximity to places of other activity (eg. Turnpike Field, Kiln Close).
- (iv) Proximity to geographic location (eg. Maldon Mead, Hook Field).
- (v) Name of possible (former) owner (eg. Gibb's Field, Carter's Joy).
- (vi) Special features (eg. Butt Field, Gore).

Landowners

Thirty six landowners are named in the Schedule, of these, thirty two are individuals, one is in fact two people owning jointly (William Knight and Mrs Bayman, plots 25, 26 and 27), one is a deceased person (Alexander Wyllie) and his land is held by his executors (plot 54) and the remaining two are corporate bodies (The London and South Western Railway Company, plot 47, and the Parish Officers of Long Ditton, plots 272, 399, 417, 418).

Of the thirty six landowners sixteen own land solely in Long Ditton and eighteen own solely in Tolworth; only two (the Rector and the Earl of Lovelace) own land in both parts of the parish.

A summary of the lands owned by the thirty six is given in Table 1.

Land Occupiers

Sixty-four occupiers are identified in the Schedule; forty one occupy land in Long Ditton, twenty-five in Tolworth. Only one person holds land in both parts of the parish (the Rector); the London and South Western Railway Company and the Parish Officers of Long Ditton again are corporate bodies occupying land in the Parish. Executors for Alexander Wyllie are shown as occupiers of his holdings.

A summary of the lands occupied by the sixty-four is given in Table 2.
